

Performance Commentary

The fund posted a good absolute and relative return in the month. In line with previous market recoveries following painful market lows, we observe strong performance in early cyclical value sectors such as commodities and select sub-segments within industrials. Indeed, our positions in copper producer Ivanhoe Mines and gold miner Roxgold have been significant positive contributors. The earlier drawdown of lumber capacity in the US/ Canada was followed by an unexpected demand boost as home improvement has increased dramatically during the pandemic and propelled lumber prices to near all-time highs. This has positively impacted our position in Canadian lumber producer West Fraser Timber. We initiated a new position in Japanese elevator and escalator producer Fujitec. We see significant improvement potential in fundamental operating efficiencies and the ability to close the margin gap to competitors. In addition, we see opportunities for the company to optimise its balance sheet, unwind major cross holdings and return capital to shareholders. Several activist funds are pressuring for the change and the shares trade at a significant discount to peers. We currently hold 35 positions with an increased exposure towards small and mid-cap positions as we see better value in these segments versus larger caps.
