Monthly commentary, July 2025

Global equity markets edged higher in July, temporarily overcoming concerns of a tariff-driven economic slowdown. Despite the cautious optimism, uncertainty remains elevated, as reflected in Q2 earnings reports and management commentary and a number of companies have revised down their full-year guidance or issued profit warnings. Still, the broader market has shown resilience, although volatility in individual stocks remains elevated.

Geopolitical tensions persist, most notably with Russia's ongoing illegal full-scale invasion of Ukraine, which continues to mount a determined defence. Sector-level performance dispersion in global equities has been notable year-to-date: Industrials and Utilities have led the way, while Consumer Discretionary and Health Care have lagged. Elsewhere, global headlines included Tanzania cutting its benchmark interest rate by 25 basis points to 5.75%, and Uruguay unveiling pro-business legislation aimed at reducing corporate taxes and easing regulatory burdens.

SKAGEN Global underperformed its benchmark index in July. The fund's top three contributors to absolute return were Microsoft, Amazon and Samsung Electronics. As highlighted in our Q2 report, we took advantage of the significant market pullback earlier this year to increase our position in Microsoft, a long-term holding in the SKAGEN Global portfolio since 2010. The stock has since rebounded strongly. In addition, Microsoft delivered an impressive quarterly report showing strength across the board with Azure, its cloud platform, standing out as the key growth driver. Amazon has also recovered well from a weak start to the year. However, the stock pulled back somewhat following its latest earnings report, as the cloud business Amazon Web Services (AWS) showed slower growth compared to peers. That said, it is important to note that AWS, being much larger than its competitors, is unlikely to match their growth rates in percentage terms – something the market may be underappreciating. Samsung Electronics has benefitted from the Korean market being one of the stronger global equity markets so far in 2025, as investors increasingly seek alternatives to the US market.

The three worst contributors were Canadian Pacific, Abbott Laboratories and Brunello Cucinelli. Canadian Pacific, the Canadian freight railway operator, reported a solid operational quarter. However, the broader freight environment remains challenging due to the ongoing tariff-related uncertainty impacting cross-border trade. The stock has remained range-bound, but we continue to view the risk-reward profile as compelling. Abbott Laboratories, the healthcare conglomerate, delivered solid results but made a slight downward revision to its full-year guidance that was met with negative market reaction. Brunello Cucinelli, the Italian luxury brand, published a quarterly report in-line with expectations and our investment hypothesis. Nevertheless, the share price steadily declined over the month, reflecting signs of cooling demand in the luxury goods sector as a whole.

Macroeconomic uncertainty remains elevated, with tariffs continuing to represent an unpredictable wildcard. As this is an external factor beyond our control, our focus remains firmly on the companies in the fund. The valuation of the portfolio is attractive for investors with a long-term investment horizon.
