Emerging markets continue to deliver

Emerging market equities continued to deliver a decent return, both on an absolute basis and relative to developed market equities. Proof of recovery in earnings across the EM universe is a key driver, which has supported a notable flow into the asset class after significant outflow during 2013-2015. Deceleration of inflation in many emerging economies allows for interest rate cuts. This supports equity valuation, as the cost of equity declines. However, the valuation gap relative to developed market equities is still significant, measured on almost all metrics.

Our Korean holdings demonstrated a solid performance during the period helped by expectations of an improvement in governance after the change in government. President Moon and his administration have made specific suggestions on how to improve minority shareholder protection. Positive measures carried out by Samsung Electronics in terms of capital allocation and governance should encourage changes among other Korean companies.

Our Turkish investments also supported return in the period. While political and geopolitical issues are still apparent, our companies have strong market positions, solid balance sheets and low valuation. In addition, some of the holdings mainly have risk exposure abroad, making their affiliation with Turkey flawed. In a world where companies are increasingly expanding outside their home market, place of listing becomes more and more irrelevant.

Our Brazilian holdings contributed negatively to return. Political turmoil created uncertainty with accusations of corruption involvement by President Temer. This turmoil might delay needed reforms.

Key buys

We invested in two new companies during the quarter, namely China Unicom and LM Ericsson.

China Unicom is the third largest mobile operator in China. The company is valued at four times operating cash flow, which is a meaningful discount to EM operators. CU is one of the first companies to participate in China's pilot mixed ownership reform program. We expect this to result in positive governance changes. By bringing in private shareholders like some of the major internet companies and introducing a management incentive scheme for the first time, they will create a new culture and decision-making process that should make this a successful operational turnaround case with better CAPEX efficiency. If our thesis plays out, they should also get a head start in the 5G era by gaining access to a valuable spectrum.

LM Ericsson has been part of the other SKAGEN equity funds' portfolios for some time. The company is in the midst of a restructuring process, headed by the new CEO. We believe this process will accelerate further with the activist fund Cevian disclosing more than 5 percent ownership. We expect to see a leaner and more efficient company after this.

Key sells

During the quarter, we exited tyre maker, Apollo Tyres. The company has been in our fund since 2012 and we now find it fully valued after almost tripling our initial investment. We exited Sistema on litigation risk following a large claim from Rosneft, as we are uncertain about the objectivity of the Russian legal system. We sold OCI Co. and GCL-Poly Energy after a revised view on the solar industry outlook, whereby Chinese players are causing disruption to the supply/demand balance. We also sold out of investment bank, EFG-Hermes Holding, after strong share price appreciation.

Outlook

Over the past two years, we have concentrated the portfolio to focus on our single best ideas. At the end of June, our portfolio consisted of 53 companies with the 35 largest holdings accounting for 85 percent of fund's net worth. The reduction in the number of companies also frees up more time for us to search for new ideas, challenging existing portfolio holdings. The value proposition of our portfolio continues to be evident. The largest holdings are valued at a weighted P/E of 10x our estimates for this year, which is a meaningful discount to EM in general at 12x consensus forecasts. On trailing P/BV, our portfolio is valued at 1.1x. This is a material discount to EM in general at 1.7x. We see an average weighted upside for our portfolio of 29 percent. At our target prices, the portfolio would be valued at 13x earnings for the current year.

The fund selects low-priced, high-quality companies, mainly in emerging economies.

The objective is to provide the best possible risk adjusted return.

The fund is suitable for those with at least a five year investment horizon.
