A turbulent quarter

The beginning of 2022 has been turbulent with accelerating inflation and a more hawkish US Federal Reserve weighing on emerging market (EM) equities even before the Russian invasion of Ukraine in late February which dominated the news flow in March. So even though EM equities had a good start to the year, they underperformed developed markets (DM) over the quarter. Due to the fund's exposure to Russia, Kon-Tiki underperformed the index in February, but the portfolio showed robustness in March which meant a strong month relative to the index.

At the beginning of March SKAGEN decided to exclude Russian companies from our investable universe, but we need a well-functioning market before we are able to sell our holdings. Even though the most liquid stocks on the Moscow Exchange have re-opened for trading, the market is still under restrictions which mean that we, as foreigners, are not able to trade. Kon-Tiki's Russian holdings are currently priced at 0 in the NAV calculation which means that these positions were the main negative contributors for the quarter but also that there is no further downside risk related to Russia holdings in the portfolio.

Since the reopening, locally listed Russian stocks have rallied, and the Russian rouble is now back to similar levels as before the war (although currency controls could be making the rebound artificial). We are cautiously optimistic about recovering some value from our Russian holdings as we hold a diversified collection of robust companies. Sberbank is on the sanctions list, and therefore the recoverable values are uncertain even though it was one of the best run banks in EM with strong growth, a solid balance sheet and an exciting future. Leading grocery operators Magnit and X5 on the other hand are not sanctioned. They hardly have any USD cost exposure, all loans are in local currency and interest rates are fixed. They are actually long-term beneficiaries of the current difficult environment as they are able to push through food inflation to their consumers, and are likely to gain market share as weaker operators are struggling. Since the Crimea annexation in 2014 these operators have changed their business model to focus on locally produced sources in order not to depend on imports.

Western nations' financial sanctions against Russia have been extraordinary, and as a result the conflict will have major consequences also for the world economy. Russia and Ukraine's important role as major exporters across many commodity classes means the conflict has already caused a widespread surge in prices. Increasing commodity prices can lead to disruptions to global supply chains and affect everything from industrial production to consumer confidence. While the fund's direct exposure to Russia has had a negative effect, the strong relative performance in March shows the robustness of the rest of the Kon-Tiki portfolio.

Contributors and detractors

Some indirect beneficiaries of the commodity price increases can be seen in this quarter's list of positive contributors. Copper producer Turquoise Hill not only benefits from higher copper prices, but Rio Tinto announced an offer to acquire the remaining 49% they don't already own in an all-cash offer. We view the bid as too low, however, and look forward to the continuation as we have not sold out. Chinese-listed CNOOC, which is engaged in the exploration, development, production and sale of crude oil and gas also benefited from increasing energy prices amid the growing energy crisis.

Within EM, not surprisingly, performance has been defined by whether a country imports or exports energy and other commodities, given the key inflation pressure points. Many Latin American countries have therefore had a respite during the period, with Brazil in particular showing strength after a tough 2021. This is reflected in the portfolio, and our Brazilian holdings are positive contributors. Sendas (or Assai), which is the leading Cash & Carry format in Brazil, staged a major comeback after being hit hard at the end of last year after announcing a big acquisition. The recent economic crisis in Brazil supported strong growth for the format given their competitive price positioning. A still modest valuation continues to fail to reflect their strong position within the most successful food retailing model in Brazil, a strong management record, exceptional market share growth and expected strong growth and higher returns on capital going forward.

Portfolio activity

Two new companies entered the portfolio during the quarter. Cosmax is the global leader in cosmetics development and manufacturing and is seeing strong growth on the back of digital disruption of the traditional brand order especially in China. In addition, Chilean holding company Quinenco has already contributed positively to the portfolio. The company offers deeply discounted exposure to the strong container shipping market through its indirect holding in Hapag-Lloyd.

We exited VinaCapital Vietnam Opportunity Fund after strong performance, while Hollysys was exited due to corporate governance concerns.

Outlook

We continue to have strong conviction in the attractiveness of the fund's underlying positions and the overall portfolio composition. The weakness of EM equities and Kon-Tiki's recent underperformance mean the portfolio is trading at an unwarranted discount to both our estimates of fair value, with an estimated upside of close to 70%, and on an absolute level (22e P/E of 6x versus the EM index at 11x). We are delighted to see what could be the beginning of a growth-to-value rotation, at the same time as EM equities are trading at a historically high discount to DM.

The fund selects low-priced, high-quality companies, mainly in emerging economies. The objective is to provide the best possible risk adjusted return. The fund is suitable for those with at least a five year investment horizon. Subscriptions are made in fund units and not directly in stocks or other securities. The fund has risk profile 6. The benchmark reflects the fund's investment mandate. Since the fund is actively managed, the portfolio will deviate from the composition of the benchmark.
